The Historical Society Plans a Busy Spring!

The Auglaize County Historical Society will host a presentation by historian Mary Ann Olding entitled “The Verdin Bell Company and its Auglaize County Connections” on Monday, March 22, at 7 p.m. in the Parish Life Center of St. Joseph Catholic Church. The program is free and open to the public.

The Verdin family has operated a bell and clock company in Cincinnati for almost 170 years, serving churches and other institutions across the country and around the world. The Verdin family, however, has a special connection to this area, in the person of Philomena Verdin Puetz.

Olding’s historical research—in Wapakoneta, Cincinnati, and France—focuses on five brothers and two sisters of the German-speaking Verdin family who moved to Cincinnati about 1837 from the Strasburg area of France. Within a few years, Francis De Sales and Michel Verdin founded a bell and clock business operated today by the sixth generation of the Verdin family. The connection to Wapakoneta dates from the family’s earliest days in Cincinnati when Philomena Verdin was born in 1841 to Francis de Sales and Josephine Verdin. Upon the death of her mother, the infant Philomena was sent to France to live with her grandmother and uncle, while her father remained in Cincinnati.

In 1842, the Verdin Brothers installed the clock tower in St. Mary’s Catholic Church, the oldest Catholic church building in the Archdiocese of Cincinnati. After the Miami-Erie Canal opened in 1846, dozens of Catholic parishes were established in communities around Mercer and Auglaize Counties, an area later termed the “Land of the Cross-Tipped Churches.” Skilled clockmakers, the Verdin Brothers served many of these brick churches, with their soaring steeples and clock towers.

Philomena Verdin returned from France to Cincinnati about 1855. She followed her Uncle Michel Verdin to Wapakoneta where he went to install the clock tower for the (original) St. Joseph Catholic Church, dedicated in 1858. A cultured, single woman who taught French and piano, she must have been an anomaly in a city settled primarily by German immigrant families. In 1859, she married Adolph Puetz, raised four children, and lived at 109 E. Pearl Street until her death in 1892. Descendants of the Philomena Verdin family still live in the Wapakoneta and the Cleveland area.

Mary Ann Olding is known throughout the area for her decades of meticulous scholarship documenting the architecture, culture, and history of the communities of west-central Ohio and beyond. The Auglaize County Historical Society is pleased to host this presentation and thanks Pastor Patrick Sloneker and St. Joseph Parish for their hospitality.

Historical Society to Present Summer Teachers Institute

For the second time in three years the Auglaize County Historical Society was awarded a major grant from the Ohio Humanities Council to host a Summer Teachers Institute. The 2010 Institute is entitled “Ohio’s Early 20th Century Authors. It will be presented Tuesday, June 22 through Thursday, June 24, 2010.

Throughout its history Ohio has been home to many significant and influential authors, no less so in the early 20th century. Ohio’s Early 20th Century Authors will provide Literature/Language Arts and Social Studies instructors with the tools they need to incorporate the writings of some of the most significant authors of this period into their classrooms.

The works of Sherwood Anderson, Louis Bromfield, Paul Laurence Dunbar, and James Thurber are familiar to many. Although representing a broad spectrum of writing styles, the authors are often connected by their autobiographical references, historical influences, and themes, which will be addressed during the three-day session. The Institute will also introduce teachers to Ruth McKenney and Auglaize County’s Jim Tully, significant but lesser known Ohio writers from the period. The Auglaize County Historical Society has assembled scholars from Ashland University, Hiram College, Ohio State University, and the Paul Laurence Dunbar House, among others, to present this Institute, geared toward secondary teachers of Literature/Language Arts and Social Studies. The three-day event will include individual presentations, panel discussions, and a field trip to the Dunbar House in Dayton. ACHS Trustee Chad Doll serves as curriculum consultant for the Institute, through an arrangement with Wright State University, two graduate credits are available for Institute participants. Enrollment is limited to 25. For more information about attending or volunteering for the Institute, contact Rachel Barber.
As the inaugural event of its 2010 programming season, the Auglaize County Historical Society will host a living biography of Lucy Webb Hayes, wife of President Rutherford B. Hayes, on Sunday, March 7, at 2 p.m. at New Knoxville’s historic United Methodist Church, 109 South Main Street, New Knoxville. The program will be presented by Betty Darst. The event is free and open to the public, and has been made possible by the Ohio Humanities Council.

Native Ohioan Lucy Webb Hayes is connected to many “firsts.” She was the first wife of a president to have a college degree, and she described the dynamic of the Civil War on the first typewriter in the White House. Stretching her role as First Lady beyond that of hostess, Mrs. Hayes worked for completion of the Washington Monument. She also brought the Easter Egg Roll to the White House lawn, where it continues today. This first person portrayal lifts Lucy out of the pages of history and connects her to the present and future of Ohio and the country.

Historical Society administrator Rachel Barber states, “Inasmuch as the accomplished Mrs. Hayes was such a devoted member of the Methodist Church, and a strong leader for women of the denomination, we’re also excited that this first person portrayal will be hosted at this beautiful Methodist Church.”

Betty Darst presents a living biography of fascinating First Lady Lucy Webb Hayes. The roles of historian and dramatist are Darst’s favorite avocations. She has worked for many years to share stories of exciting people, including many Ohioans. Darst is an adjunct faculty member at Wright State and is recognized nationally for her leadership in young adult and children’s literature.
